

Drop Jordan appears to have the masses on edge in regards to their Gatorade-inspired Air Jordan VI which is expected to hit retailers sometime in the near future. We've seen an almost monochromatic green pair floating around the interweb in recent weeks and the rumors of the 'Carmine'-esque pair appeared to only be a rumor until now as the 'Like Mike' Air Jordan VI has finally been revealed to the sneaker community. The KD 10 For Sale takes on the color blocking of the 1991 released rendition of the highly popularized silhouette dressed in a nubuck orange base complete with white angular overlays complete with all the necessary perforations we're used to seeing on the sneaker. Black detailing adds some balance to the kicks as it can be found on the tongue, heel tab, and midsole of the sneaker. An orange satin shroud sits at the center of the sneaker complete with a green embroidered Jumpman stitched into the material, while the phrase 'If I Could Be' is embroidered on the back of the tongue of the kicks, and a white midsole and partially transparent outsole round out the kicks.

Unfortunately, Cheap Air Vapormax is looking like the green version of the sneaker is just a sample and won't be released while this particular Gatorade-inspired 'Like Mike' Air Jordan VI will be the official sneaker to see the light of day. With that being said, who's copping? Let us know in the comment section below.